

SPULLENMANNEN

De Spullenmannen are a collective of autodidact visual artists and performers. They recycle waste objects and materials into theatre, installations, visual art and purposeless contraptions. They like to design several layers of perception into a single piece of art, so that it becomes a world in itself, with new things to discover also after experiencing it a number of times. De Spullenmannen don't work within one art discipline, but rather look for the artform that best suits the story they want to tell.

COMPANY

The core group consists of Diana Wildschut, Harmen G. Zijp and Peter Uithoven. For most projects collaboration is sought with other artists, engineers, musicians, actors and authors.

Educated as scientists and trained as artists, De Spullenmannen have a special focus in exploring the borderland between science and art. They mostly work autonomous, but also engage in lectures, demonstrations and occasional custom made projects.
